The Dumont Brothers: Path of the Spirit (Toronto: Berkeley Studios, 1992) [video].

Faithful Women—Volume 2 (Montreal, National Film Board of Canada, 1991) [video].
Two titles from a series on women and religion. Harmony and Balance shares the personal and communal traditions of nature-based, Native American spirituality (53 min. 40 sec.). Working Towards Peace illustrates possibilities for, and difficulties with dialogue as a Palestinian and an Israeli woman struggle with the deep-rooted conflicts that separate their communities (53 min. 25 sec.). Available from the National Film Board: www.nfb.ca

Jesus vs. Crow (Whitehorse, Yukon: Northern Native Broadcasting, 1999) [video].
Narrator and producer/director is Robert Smith. E-mail: nnby@yknet.yk.ca
An excellent overview of the colliding viewpoints about the intersection of Aboriginal spirituality, traditional beliefs and values, and Christianity. It features traditional practitioners from the Old Crow Healing Centre, the Anglican Bishop, and an Aboriginal Pentecostal pastor. It speaks of the role of residential schools in destroying and distorting Aboriginal spirituality, and the Anglican apology is included.

Multiple Choices—Searching (Montreal, National Film Board of Canada, 1995) [video].
Directed by Alison Burns, produced by Sally Bochner. An elderly participant laments that young people are missing something in rejecting the church and organized religion. Participants discuss the place of ritual, religion and spirituality in their lives. Available from the National Film Board: www.nfb.ca

Religions of the World (Schlessinger Media, 1998) [video].
Ben Kingsley. Thirteen videocassettes (50 min. each). Available through: www.libraryvideo.com

St. Rose’s Passion (Vista, CA: Storyville Films, 2004) [video].
The story of a nun’s effort to counter antisemitism in Catholic teaching. The film, just under the 40-minute limit for the short category, features Dominican Sr Rose Thering, a retired education professor from Seton Hall University, a Catholic school in South Orange, New Jersey. It focuses particularly on her contribution to getting changes in Catholic school textbooks that included language traditionally used to blame the Jews for the death of Jesus.
